

Please DO NOT allow people to use cell phones on airline flights. I just recently flew halfway across the country and as soon as we landed, one of the passengers two rows behind me started using his phone. The problem...he was not self-aware of loud he was talking, and that was in a relatively low noise level environment of taxiing! I can't imagine what it would be like to have an aircraft full of people all trying to talk on their phones during the higher noise level of cruise flight. People would be shouting thinking they needed to raise their voice to be heard over the conversation of the person sitting next to them.

It seems to me that most business travelers who feel they can't be out of touch for a few hours carry other wireless devices that would allow them to communicate--laptops and phones for text messages. Surely we can go that long without voice communication.
